What better place to begin the adventure than in Pennsylvania.

We're in the midst of a technological revolution—a revolution that will forever change the way we view and use television. Welcome to the world of digital television, or DTV. With DTV, we now have the capability to send data directly to your computer allowing you to interact with a digital broadcast. We'll be able to offer four or more programs at the same time on a digital channel. something called multi-casting. And it will give us the ability to broadcast high-definition programs on a wide screen format with twice the picture resolution of today's analog system, proud to have launched the first digital television channel in the Commonwealth.

A new age is upon us. You are about to

This new technology opens the door to tremendous learning opportunities for Pennsylvania's educators and students. From pre-school to adult learning, public television will play an expanded and highly visible role in education.

New High-Definition Television

Traditional Analog Television

Pennsylvania is truly taking a leadership role through public television. We are among the first states to recognize and support the power of this new educational tool and to help educate others about its possibilities. A public television station, WITF in Harrisburg, is rather than just an observer, in the broadcast experience. Where you can choose between adult education, a children's program, a live debate from city hall, or a PBS program for your students all at the same time, on the same channel. Where the clarity of picture and sound will greatly enhance the beauty of PBS shows on the arts, history, science, nature and travel. What better place to begin it all than in Pennsylvania. And who better to bring DTV to life than Pennsylvania's public television stations.
